Harris came threateningly toward the wagon, but was met only by the imperturbable smile of his hired man. He thrust his foot on a spoke of the wheel and prepared to spring onto the tank, but at that moment the horses stirred and his foot slipped. Seeing that the farmer was about to fall Travers seized him by the collar of his shirt, but in so doing he leaned and lost his own balance, when the weight of the falling man came upon him and the two tumbled onto the grass in each other's arms.

Allan, having satisfied himself that the engine would take no harm, had followed his father, and came over the crest of the ridge above the coulee just in time to see Jim apparently strike his employer and the two struggling on the grass together. In an instant the young man's hot blood was in his head; he rushed forward, and just as Jim had risen, to his knees he struck him a stinging blow in the face that measured him again in the grass.

He Rushed Forward, and Just as Jim Had Risen to His Knees He Struck Him a Stinging Blow in the Face.

It was only for an instant. Travers sprang to his feet, a red line slowly stretching down his cheek as he did so. Allan came upon him swinging a tremendous blow at the jaw; but Jim guarded skilfully, and answered with a smash from the shoulder straight on the chin, which laid his adversary's six feet prostrate before him.

Allan rose slowly, sober but determined, and for a moment it looked as though a battle royal were to be fought on the spot, both men strong. lean, rigid, hard as iron, and quick as steel; Allan angry, careless, furious; Jim calm, confident, and still smiling. But Harris rushed between them and seized his son by the arms.

"Stop it, Allan: stop, I say. You mustn't fight. Jim didn't hit me-I'll say that for him. Now quit it. As for you" (turning to Jim). "I'm sorry for this, but you have yourself to blame. I'll give you one more chance to answer me-what kept you?"

"I don't choose to answer." was Jim's reply, spoken in the most casual tone. His eye was rapidly closing where Allan's blow had fallen on it, but his white teeth still glistened behind a smile. "All right," said Harris. "You can go to the house and tell Mrs. Harris to pay you what is coming." And the farmer climbed onto the wagon and took the reins himself.

When Jim entered the kitchen he was received with astenishment by Mrs. Harris and Beulah. "Why, whatever has happened?" they exclaimed. "Has there been an accident? You're

But Jim smiled, and said: "No accident at all. I, have merely decided to go homesteading." And he went up the stairs to pack his belongings.

CHAPTER VI.

Into the Night.

Harris and Allan drove straight to the engine, never looking back to see what became of the hired man. On the way the farmer explained to his son what had taken place; that words had passed between them, but no blows had been struck, until Allan appeared on the scene.

"I can't make out what got into Jim, that he wouldn't answer a civil question. Jim was a good man, too." Perhaps the disturbing suggestion entered Harris' mind that the question had been none too civil, and he was really beginning to feel that after all Jim might be the aggrieved party. But he crushed down such mental sedition promptly, "It don't matter how good a man he was," he declared, "as long as I pay the piper I'm 'goin' to call the tune."

"It puts us up against it for a waterman, though," said Allan, thought-

"So it does," admitted Harris, who up to that moment had not reflected that his hasty action in dismissing Travers would result in much more delay than anything else that had occurred. "Well, we'll have to get somebody else. We'll manage till noon, and then you better ride over to Grant's or Morrison's. They'll be able to lend a man or one of the boys for a day or two,"

At noon Jim's chair was vacant, and the family sat down to dinner amid a depressing silence. No mention was made of the morning's incident until the meal was well advanced, when Harris, feeling that he ought in some way to introduce the subject, said: "Is Jim gone?"

"Yes, he's gone," blazed Beulah. "You didn't expect he'd wait to kiss you good-by, did you?"

"One in the family is enough for that treatment," put in Allan, whose swollen chin and stiff neck still biased him against Travers.

"He didn't, either. And If he did it's none of your business, you big-:" she looked her brother straight in the face, her swollen eyes telling their own story, and repeated deliberately, "you big coward."

Allan bit his lip.

"Jim's quite a hero, all right. It's too bad he's gone.'

"It's a good job he's gone," said Harris. "By the way Beulah talks things have gone far enough. I don't want my daughter marrying a farmer." "Her grandmother's daughter did," said Mrs. Harris.

"Yes, I know, but things are different now. I look for something better

It was characteristic of Harris, as of thousands of others, that, although a farmer himself, he looked for "something better" for his daughter. He was resigned to Allan being a farmer; his intimate, daily relationship with his son shrank from any possibility of separation. But for his daughter -no. He had mapped out no career for her; she might marry a doctor, lawyer, merchant, tradesman, even a peculiarity of the agriculturist that, among all professions, he holds his own in the worst repute. In later years has come a gradually broadening conception that farming, after all, calls for brain as well as muscle, and that the man who can wrestle a sucessful living from nature has as much right to hold up his head in the world is the experimenter in medicine or the lawyer playing hide-and-seek with justice through the cracks in the criminal code. Herein is a germ of the cityward migration: the farmer himself is looking for "something better" for his children.

"Jim was a good man," persisted his wife. "Don't you think you were -well, perhaps, a little hasty with

Harris sat back. It was his wife's business to agree. For twenty years and more she had been faithful in the discharge of that duty. That she should suggest an opinion out of harmony with his indicated a lack of discipline, not very serious, perhaps, but a seed which, if permitted to flourish, might develop to dangerous propor-

"So you're goln' to take his part, too? It's a strange thing if I can't handle my hired help without advice from the house."

Mary flushed at the remark. Any open quarrel with her husband, especially before the children-for she still thought of the man and woman to her left and right as "the children" -was more painful to her than any submission could have been. It would be so much easier to change the subject, to follow the line of least resistance, and forgot the incident as quickly as possible. But of late the conviction had been coming home to her that some time, somewhere, she must make a stand. And, quite unbidden, a strange surge of defiance welled in her when her husband so frankly told her to mind her own business.

"I was under the impression we were managing this farm together, you and I, John," she said, very calmly, but with a strange ring in her voice. "When we came West I understood it was to build our home. I didn't know it was just to be your home." The look of surprise with which Harris greeted her words was absolutely genuine. A hot, stinging retort sprang to his lips, but by a sudden effort he suppressed it. "We will talk about that some other time, Mary," he said. "If Jim had answered my question .airly, as he had a right to, instead of beatin' around the bush, I might 've let him off. But when I wanted to know what kept him he simply parried me, makin a fool of me and rubbin' it in with that infernal smile of his."

"So that's what started it!" exclaimed Beulah. "Well, I'll tell you what kept him, if he wouldn't. The cattle got into the oats through a break in the fence, and I couldn't get them out, and the dog went ki-yi-ing over the prairie after a rabbit, and just as I was beginning to-to-condense over it Jim came up and saved the situation. What if he did keep your old engine walting? There are more important things than plowing." "Aha!" said Harris, knowingly. "Well. I guess it's just as well it happened as it did. Jim was gettin' altogether too good at runnin' at your

"That's all the thanks he gets for working late and early, like no other hired man in the district. All right, You and Allan can milk the cows tonight, for I won't-see?"

Harris was accustomed to his daughter's frankness, and as a rule paid little regard to it. He was willing enough to be flayed, in moderation, by lies, but that was different from de-

"We'll talk about that some other time, too," he said. "And you'll milk the cows tonight as usual."

Beulah opened her lips as though to answer, but closed them again, arose, and walked out of the kitchen. For her the controversy was over; the die was cast. Her nature admitted of any amount of disputation up to a certain point, but when the irresistthle force crashed into the immovable With her war was war.

Harris finished his meal with little relish. His daughter was very, very much to him, and an open rupture with her was among the last things to . . An hour later Allan returned, accompanied by George Grant, and operations in the field were resumed. Father and son were both anxious to make up for lost time, and they worked that night long after their usual hour for quitting. It was quite dark when the two men, tired and dusty, came in at the close of their long day's labor.

The table was set for two. "We have had our supper," Mary explained. "We thought we wouldn't wait any

PHYSIOLOGICAL ACTION OF TANLAC EXPLAINED.

World's Leading Authorities Show Just What Tanlac Really IS and Explain Effect of Each of Ten Ingredients on the Human System. Power of Medicine Conclusively

*A day never passes but what thousands of people ask the question: What is Tanlac? Why its phenomenal success? Why do we hear so much about it? and Why has this preparation so far out-stripped all other medicines of its kind?

The answer to these questions is easy and can be explained in just one word-merit. Tanlac is scientifically compounded and represents years of work, study, experimentation and research by some of the foremost chemists and pharmacologists of America.

EDITORIALS BY THE EDITOR.

THE AMENDMENT ELECTION.

NEXT Saturday, Ju y 23rd, the people of Texas will be privileged to vote on five proposed amendments to their State Constitution. Briefly summarized they are as follows:

1.- To abolish the Board of Prison Commissioners, and place the system in the hands of one instead of three.

2. - To increase the salaries of State officials, including the Governor, Attorn ey General, State Treasurer, Comptroiler, and the Land Commissioner.

3.-To increase the tax for support of Confederate veterans from 5 to 7 cents on the $100 valuation.

4 -To increase the per diem of mem bers of the Legislature from $5 to $10 a day, and extending the length of a regular session.

5. - Providing that only citizens of the United States shall be entitled to vote at elections hereafter to be held in the State; that is to step a foreigner from voting on his "intention" papers.

That each proposition may justly claim merit we are not questioning, nor shall we stop to discuss.

It is sufficient for us to know that we have gotten along for a long time and very weil without either of them. In times of stress and uncertainty it is unwise to tamper with our fundamenta! law. These are stressful, uncertain times.

We have tampered too much with funcamentals already, tampered with them only to drift more dangerously further away from the moorings of the old land-marks.

Therefore, we shall vote against the whole flock and covey of them-and we don't care who knows it!

Too much law, too many law-enforcers and not enough law-observance; too much dependence upon the geverement and not enough reliance upon the rectitude of one's own conduct is some cause for too many taxes and too much lawless terror!

PRESS reports are to the effect that the forthcoming legislature will make an investigation of the Ku Klux Klan in Texas. Wonder it it will have one of the K'ansmen write into its report the happy parents of fine twin that it has no information on which to pass juckment on the proposed methods of this organization, or the good citizenship of its members!

THE State Farmers' Institute will be held this year at Austin, July 27th, 28th and 29th. Among other important matters it will consider is the cost of preducing the 1921 cotton crop and the price for which it should sell in order to restore financial stability to the country. If at all possible you should attend this meeting and give it the benefit of your counsel.

A Farm Woman's Dream.

Eggs were 10 cents a dozen, and the hens were laying all over the place. Every night the children would gather a basketful. But what did that mean? It meant work, work, work. Then there were all the little chickens to take care of so that there would be more buckets full of eggs for somebody next year. When eggs were 75 cents a dozen no one had any except the people who had never made a hen-nest or set a hen. Yet the eggs on the market at 75 cents a dozen at Ceristmas time were the same eggs that the tired woman had sold the year before for 10 cents. But nobody seemed to care how little she got for her work and trouble, or how much they had to pay for their holiday

Then there was butter, butter everywhere. This same woman had taken several pounds to town the day before, but had to bring it back home because she could not sell it. But her city friends told her they were paying 50 cents a pound for every pound of butter they got.

There were big, fine fryers running around, but her family was tired of fried chicken and longed for a change. But there was no one buying poultry ing at 9:00 a. m. and camp with the in their town. She threw out gallons specialists and teachers. Saturday, and gallons of the best sour milk that July 16th, all are invited to attend, would have made the lovliest cottage especially ladies and girls. cheese for the town folks. And there were hundreds of city babies that ought to have the sweet milk that she fed every day to the chickens and cats and dogs. There was fruit going to 12:00 m. -Dinner. waste in the orchard, and vegetables going to waste in the garden. And all the time people in the cities living out of tin cans instead of having the good fresh things going to waste all around her. The people needed her fresh food so badly. The city papers were calling for milk for babies and she was throwing it away or feeding it to the hogs by the buck-tful. The rich needed her leftovers on the farm so much and she needed their cash so much to renew the old dishes and get a new rug and some pretty clothes for the children to wear to the little Sunday school in the village. But she was helpless. She had done the work to produce all these things. Nature had done her part. The people were calling for food. The preachers were taking up collections every few weeks for the starving somewhere; the mails brought pleading letters from the Red Cross, and the relief societies for money, money, money to feed the starving in China, Armenia and even the flood and drouth sufferers of her own country. She heard them all, but there was all her source of wealth all going to waste and she could not even exchange the things she had for the things she needed in her own nome Her home could not grow, her heart could not grow, her children were not being tied to their own home by those things that make a home interesting and attractive. She could not give them music lessons; she could not give them expression or art at school because she could not exchange her goods that were going to waste for the things her children longed for to make them feel and appear like other children.

"What is the use?" And as she slept she had a vision or a dream or something that seemed too good to ever come true. She thought something happened and a market was established for all her surp us products. She went to the little town and the merchants paid her 30 cents a dozen for all the eggs she had and told her to bring in all she could spare. She found a market for her milk and cream and did not need to churn and churn and churn to make soap grease. She was told that Texas was going to buy all the milk and cream and eggs and poultry the farmers' wives could bring to market and give them the cash for every dollar of it. And every woman on the farm might open regular a BANK ACCOUNT of her very own and begin from that day to save up her own money for all those things they want in their home. That light plant, the electric washer, the new rugs, those new clothes for the children and Oh, all the things she had wanted so long and earned a thousand times but never received. And to think they might have a few spare cents to give to the really hungry the next time a call came from some starving nation. Oh, to be free financially. To see a chance to do the things that needed doing so badly. To not have to ask for money every time something was needed and hear that dreaded tale of woe once more. To use her own judgment about a few things and not be forced to depend on somebody who had no judgment about her business and took no interest in her business. To be a real, tree, self-made woman and run things as she could and would if she had ever had a half chance. What a dream! She knew she must be dreaming, and she never wanted to wake up. She hoped it would go on forever or at least until she could get everything fixed up once just to see how it would look and feel to have everything as she wanted it for just one minute, if no more. She would like to show the neighbors and the whole werld worried herself to sleep, thinking, what she would do if she could turn HER brains and HER energy into the realization of her dreams of a home. There must have been a smile of victory and contenument on the face of the drea mer as she thought of the finishing touches on her made over home. But her dream was broken by a shrill voice calling, "Mary, the way you are grinnin' you must be dreamin' 'bout somethin' beautiful. Don't you know it's time to get up and get breakfast."-Phoebe K. Warner in Star-Telegram.

With all this in her heart, she finally

PUTTING IT UP TO DADDY

Small Girl Evidently of Opinion That the "Laborer Is Worthy of His Hire."

The girl temporarily hired to help out during mother's illness had just left. During her stay five-year-old Clara absorbed with interest many of the details of housework; in fact, had been of material assistance in such ways as setting the table, helping with the dishes, etc. When Mary quit unexpectedly the housework got behind and little Clara voluntarily set about to straighten things out, and that night met father at the door when he came home from work, saying:

"Come right on out to the table. daddy; everything's all ready. Mother's feeling better an' you must eat the supper I got for you."

After viewing the bread cut at a 45degree angle, cold potatoes from the previous night, and other things which Clara had gathered for the royal repast, father said: "Well, my little girl is right on the job, eh? We'll never miss Mary, will we? That's just fine, honey; daddy knows you will look out for him, all right, won't you?" "Oh, yes," said Clara, then coyly. "Dad, how much do you think you ought to pay me?"

The DELTOR

This is one reason why the addition of the Deltor subtracts the entire price from the Butterick Pattern.

Your layout is specially worked out for your size and for the width in which your material comes.

With the Deltor layouts you lay your pattern on your material as fast as you can pin it in place. Our highly trained experts spent hours on the task.

What is your time worth?

You pay your cleaning woman fifty cents an hour. Your time is worth more than that. More than the price of the pattern.

So the Butterick Pattern with the Deltor costs you less than nothing.

MIRANDY AND THE WISE MEN

Much Advice Has Left Her With the Conviction That Woman Has a "Jubous Job."

"My gracious, hit sho'ly am gittin' to be a jubous job to be a woman!" So runs Mirandy's plaint in Good Housekeeping.

"Fust comes one o' dem smart Elicks whut feels lak dey has got a call to pint de way to women, an' he say, 'Let women marry. Dey ain't got no business to wuk at de kind o' wuk dat's got a pay envelope in hit, becaze ef day does dey takes de place of some man whut oughter have de job to support his fambly. Let women wuk in de home whar de Lawd put 'em.'

"I jes' get hit kind o' settled in mah mind dat mah duty as a woman isn't to earn any money, an' dat mebbe I'd better give up dat fine washin' I'm takin' in to buy me one o' dese heah chicken-feather fur capes, an' anodder wise man comes along an' he say how women is vampires, an' leeches, a-suckin' de lifeblood out o' deir fathers an' husbands, an' dat de female sect won't never amount to nothin' ontil hit gits into de world an' rustles for hit's own livin'.

"'Jes' think,' he cries, a-beatin' on his breast, 'ob de great disgrace hit is for a able-bodied woman to set home and sponge on some man instead o' her gittin' a job as a longshoreman, or a steeple jack, an' earnin' a honest livin'! I tell you she ain't nothin' but one o' dese heah parasites. Dat's whut is a-sendin' de country to de

"An' den I runs up aginst anodder wise man who makes his livin' a-passin' out advice to women, an' you oughter heah de way he lambastes women for deir vanity, an' for puttin' ev'ything dey can git deir hands on onto deir backs.

"'I tell you,' he says, 'dat de curse ob de world is women's extravagance. Hit's whut drives men to drink, an' makes 'em steal, an' fills de divorce court,' an' when he say dat all de men 'spon's 'Amen!' Dough I 'bleeged to take notice dat whilst a man approves ob his wife not takin' no interest in dress he jes' kind o' natchally sidles over towa'ds de odder woman which looks most like a fashion plate.

"All dis is whut makes bein' a woman sech a jubous job," reiterates Mirandy, "for how's she gwine to keep from bein' a parasite onless she wuks. an' ef she wuks how's she gwine to keep from takin' some man's job; how's she gwine to stay home onless she's got a home; how's she gwine to marry onless she can ketch a hushand? De men sho'ly is sprinters in dese days, an' dey runs so fast away from de altar dat dere ain't many women dat's got de speed an' de endurance to chase one down.

"Yassum," Mirandy stoutly concludes, "dere ain't no odder job on de face o' de yearth dat's as hard as bein' a woman, or dat's got so many curi's peculiarities to hit."

Most individuals are more inclined to yield to the alluring than to the assuring.
